1H FY12/06 results slight better than expected. DBA announced its interim results yesterday. Net profit came in at RMB84m (up 23.8% YoY) on a revenue growth of 22.6% to RMB311m. Revenue growth was mainly driven by the increasing shipments of smart-card vending machines, which jumped to RMB103m in 1H FY12/06 (cf. RMB63.4m in 1H FY12/05). Since smart-card vending machines carried slightly higher gross margin compared with other products, the company managed to maintain its gross margin at 41.1% in 1H FY12/06 (cf. 41.5% in 1H FY12/05). Meanwhile, operating expenses to sales ratio was kept at 9.6% (cf. 10.1% in 1H FY12/05) with effective cost controls. DBA booked around RMB3m for the IPO expenses. Effective tax rate was at 15% and is expected to remain at this level going forward. Last but not least, the company proposed to pay an interim dividend of HK$0.01 (payout of around 13%) for 1H FY12/06, which was a pleasant surprise to us. Management expects no less than 30% of profit will be paid for the full year.

Attractive valuations. Our sum-of-the-parts and DCF valuation model suggest a fair value of HK$2.3 (an implied 11.3x FY12/07F P/E) per share. The stock currently only trades at an undemanding 7.3x FY12/06F P/E and 5.8x FY12/07F P/E. The current price weakness should offer a good entry point for value investors. We maintain our BUY rating for the counter and keep our target price of HK$2.3 unchanged, representing a 93% upside from the current share price.
