Current + expected capacity

Strong demand for lingerie in China. According to "The Industry Research Report of China: Underwear Industry 2006", by China Industry Research Center, cotton underwear sales are expected to grow 20% p.a. in the next ten years.

23.3m

Competition is intense and Embry does not have superior operating efficiency. Embry experienced slower sales growth compared with the +20% p.a. growth of the cotton underwear industry in China. Embry's sales actually slowed down from 18% in 2004 to 8.4% in 2005, despite the fact that it captured the largest market share in China in 2005. The market widely expects Embry to command a higher margin than OEM lingerie manufacturers since it carries its own brands. Although Embry's gross margin is very high at 75% compared to 30% by Top Form (333 HK), which is mainly an OEM lingerie manufacturer, Embry's operating margin of 10.2% is comparatively lower than Top Form's 15.7% in 2005. The above implies that 1) the lingerie market in China is fragmented and Embry does not possess a dominant market position, even though it captured the largest market share; 2) brand awareness is low in China and 3) competition is intense and Embry does not have superior operating efficiency. We see selling and distribution expenses as the major swing factor.

Expansion plans. Embry expects to have 300 gross additional outlets by 2007, and to double its existing production capacity by 2008.

Valuation. The trading range of lingerie comparables, such as Brazin Ltd., Calida, Delta Galil, Hanesbrand, Maidenform, Tefron, Wacoal and Warnaco is between 13.1x to 19.4x 2007F, while Top Form only trades at 11x. Although it is in a net cash position, net cash reduced from HK$131m in 2004 to HK$25m in 2005. One positive point is that, there is no direct listed comparables for Embry in H.K.. It will draw some attraction from the market.
